Florence Nightingale: God's Servant at the Battlefield. Florence went against the wishes of her wealthy parents and defied social custom when she took up a career that no respectable woman of that day would even consider. She became a nurse. History knows her now as "The Lady with the Lamp." Night after night she walked among the cots of wounded soldiers, carrying her kerosene lamp to light the darkness and wearing her cape to keep out the cold.

I haven't finished " Florence Nightingale: God's Servant at the Battlefield" yet because I have other books I am also reading. But I do want to finish this one. So far I love it and I'm sure I would have loved Florence herself if I could have known her. I really respect her for doing what she felt God was calling her to do, namely making nursing what it is today.

Florence Nightingale, Nurse, Renewer of Society 18 May 1910. The commemoration of Florence Nightingale is controversial. On the one hand, she doubted or denied many of the central articles of the Creed. On the other hand, she believed in God and devoted her life to His service as she understood it. She was born in Florence on 12 May 1820 of upper-class English parents travelling through Italy, and named for her native city.
